

Gov. Tom Wolf's "Fairness Act" is anything but fair.

1) Forcing people to support events they disagree with isn't fair.

We've all heard about dressmakers who didn't want to make the First Lady's Inauguration Day gown or entertainers that didn't want to participate in the ceremony. They shouldn't have to. But neither should wedding service providers who don't support same-sex marriage.

Many in the wedding service industry who believe marriage is between a man and a woman have been punished by laws like the "Fairness Act" after deciding not to participate in same-sex wedding ceremony. Based on this type of law, courts have said that if you're in business, you have no choice but to participate.

2) Jeopardizing churches, private ministries and charities isn't fair.

Should government force religious schools and ministries to hire employees that are opposed to their mission? Should government force Catholic Charities to place children in homes of same-sex couples?

Laws like the "Fairness Act" force religious adoption agencies and foster care services, ministries and charities to either violate their beliefs on marriage, sexuality, and gender or go out of business.

3) Removing privacy rights from students isn't fair.

Should government force school students to tolerate changing for gym class with someone of the opposite biological sex? Should government force boys who self-identify as female to stay in the same hotel accommodations as girls on overnight class trips?

Laws like the "Fairness Act" eliminate privacy rights by forcing not just public schools, but all businesses open to the public and all places of employment to open restrooms and locker rooms to members of the opposite biological sex who self-identify differently. This also has applied to participation in sports teams and shared sleeping arrangements for school overnight trips.
